The Urge Context Map - Supported Practice Lab

You may write, draw, think quietly, use fiction, observe, or pass. Share only what you choose. This educational activity is not a test.

Fictional example: Urges increase after a stressful shift and an unstructured evening.

1. What is known in the fictional example, and what needs checking?

2. Separate setting, emotional cues, interpretations, and available supports in a fictional urge episode. My notes, drawing, or possible response:

3. Where could support enter the sequence?

4. One optional next step, support, or reason to revise the idea:

You can pause or stop. Ask your facilitator for an alternative if this does not fit. No identifying information belongs in shared copies. Independent clinical review pending.
